INTERPROFESSIONAL EDUCATION: EXAMINING COLLECTIVE COMPETENCE AND POPULATION HEALTH IN NORTHERN HEALTH

FALL 2019 (Thursday Evenings 4:00 p.m. - 7:00 p.m.)

Gayle Adams-Carpino CYW, RSW, MSW

Lecturer, Interprofessional Education, Assistant Professor-Division of Clinical Sciences

PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

This program is designed for undergraduate and graduate social, medical, and health sciences learners who are interested in directly applying the six competencies highlighted in the Canadian Interprofessional Health Collaborative (2010) Framework (e.g. role clarification, interprofessional communication, team functioning, patient/client/community centered care, interprofessional conflict resolution and collaborative leadership). Learners will engage in weekly sessions targeting the six competencies. Learners will be responsible for integrating the knowledge, skills and attitudes acquired into clinical practice. A focus of the program will be the collective problem solving, designing and delivery of student interprofessional health promotion workshops with community non-profit agencies.

SERIES CRITERION

A written critical reflection paper (1-2 pages) supported by two peer-reviewed articles will be an expected deliverable.

Registration is limited.

OBJECTIVES

After six sessions, learners will be able to:

- Examine roles and scope of a variety of professions
- Analyze and experience how interprofessional competencies support effective client/patient/family/community centred care
- Cultivate an understanding of group processes and collective competence
- Gain an appreciation of how the social determinants of health influence well-being
- Increase knowledge of designing and delivering student interprofessional health promotion workshops with community non-profit organizations
